

Contributors' Notes

Lawrence Douglas is Assistant Professor of Law, Jurisprudence & Social Thought at Amherst College. His work has appeared in numerous journals including Law and Social Inquiry, Mosaic, Law and Society Review, Tachyon, and The Massachusetts Review. He is currently engaged in a study of legal representations of the Holocaust, a portion of which is forthcoming in The Yale Law Journal.

Ariela Gross is a Ph.D. candidate at Stanford University. She received her J.D. from Stanford Law School.

Carl Landauer is an attorney at Farella, Braun & Martel in San Francisco. He has taught European cultural history at Yale, Stanford, and McGill Universities and has written on the history of the humanities and the history of law.

Desmond Manderson, LL.B. (Hons.) (1985), B.A. (Hons.) (1986) (A.N.U.), is completing a D.C.L. from McGill University and is currently a Harry A. Bigelow Fellow at the University of Chicago Law School. His interests include legal theory, legal history, semiotics and philosophy. He has written extensively in the fields of drug history and policy; Oxford University Press recently published his book From Mr. Sin to Mr. Big—A History of Drug Laws.

Austin Sarat is William Nelson Cromwell Professor of Jurisprudence & Political Science at Amherst College, where he is currently Chair of the College's Department of Law, Jurisprudence & Social Thought. He is author (with William Felstiner) of Divorce Lawyers and Their Clients: Power and Meaning in the Legal Process, and co-editor (with Thomas Kearns) of The Rhetoric of Law and Law in Everyday Life. He is co-editor (with Susan Silbey) of Studies in Law, Politics & Society and of the Series on Law, Meaning & Violence published by the University of Michigan Press (with Martha Minow and Michael Ryan). Recent publications include articles in Law & Society Review, Law & Social Inquiry, and Social and Legal Studies. His current research focuses on moral commitment and professional identity, the relationship of law and violence in the context of capital punishment, and the legal ideology of the welfare poor. During 1995-96 he will be working on a book on the death penalty bar, tentatively titled Lawyers for the Condemned.

Aaron Schuster is a senior at Amherst College majoring in Law, Jurisprudence & Social Thought. His areas of special academic interest include legal control of new information technologies, and psychoanalysis and legal theory.

Robert Weisberg is Professor of Law at Stanford University. He is co-author (with Professor Guyora Binder of SUNY Buffalo) of the forthcoming book Literary Criticisms of Law (Princeton University Press, 1996).

James Q. Whitman is Professor of Law at Yale University, where he teaches Roman Law and European Legal History. His writings on the eighteenth century include "Why did the Revolutionary Lawyers Confuse Custom and Reason?," 58 University of Chicago Law Review 1321 (1991); "The Seigneurs Descend to the Rank of Creditors," 6 Yale Journal of Law & the Humanities 249 (1994); and "Reason or Hermeticism?," forthcoming in the Southern California Interdisciplinary Law Journal.